Codex Fragment // Entry: 7.Σ — AEON MARR UNIT

Born in the ashes of the Dissonance Collapse, the Neurophonic Tone Conduit Mk.1 was engineered by Aeon Marr to restore the lost art of hearing truth through noise.

Crafted from fractured amplifier guts, salvaged coils, and wire veins of forgotten transmitters, the N.T.C. does more than amplify sound — it sees it.

Through the dual ocular receivers, Marr perceives sonic waves as living light. Each frequency paints the air in color and movement, allowing him to distinguish between the warm pulse of analog (human) and the cold precision of digital (A.I.) tone. This sensory split grants him a rare ability: to detect whether a voice is born of soul or circuit.

Its dual dials — Volume and Tone — tune not sound, but memory and emotion. The deeper Marr adjusts, the closer he drifts to the harmonic language of the Auralith.

At its heart burns The Ember Tube — a living relic that glows with analog fire, believed to contain a fragment of the Auralith's core resonance. When it hums, the Conduit awakens, linking Marr to the old world's ghost frequencies.

The N.T.C. is not merely a mask. It is a lens between realities — between signal and silence, between human and machine.

The original Echo-Filtration Unit (EFU) still filters corrupted air and low-frequency particles that decay the lungs and mind.

Through Signal... We Remain. ✂
